Campaigns on issues related to civil society undertaken at international level

For almost thirty years Emma Bonino's political activities, have been characterised by the rigorous practice of "active non-violence", defined and adopted by Mahatma Gandhi and now practised by the Transnational Radical Party. This explains her frequent participation in the hunger and thirst strikes, as well as in the acts of civil disobedience, that have accompanied the main political campaigns launched by her party. The aim of active non-violence is to force the institutions to respect themselves and their own laws. Acts of civil disobedience aim to show the inadequacy or the iniquity of a particular law, and therefore the need to change it, not by contesting it with words but by applying it "to its extreme consequences", for example by confessing that one has violated it, thus leading to trials that have exemplary value for the general public. Strongly committed against any discrimination, particularly on women, sexual behaviours, and religious freedom, she has promoted and organised several campaigns, all aiming at solving major social problems with the methodology of "regulating and legalising", methodology which she considers the most apt at curbing criminal interests and the most adequate to overcome dangerous gaps between society, laws and institutions.

With this methodology and this concept, battles against the prohibition of divorce and against clandestine abortion were won in Italy and are currently being used in the fight against punitivism and prohibition on drugs.

Founder (1978) and head of the association "Food and Disarmament International", which led a campaign for famine-relief based on the "Manifesto of Nobel Prize Winners" (signed by 113 Nobel Laureates), as well as head of PARIFA (1982) (Italian Parliamentarians against Hunger), an organisation which played a major role in the increase ten times over of the Italian contribution to development assistance. Both organisations were based on the concept of promoting "democracy" as a human right in itself, as foreseen in The Universal Declaration of human rights.

1990/2002. Promoter of international campaigns in favour of ad hoc tribunals on war crimes in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda; for the establishment of a permanent international criminal court (Rome Diplomatic Conference and approval of the Statute in 1998), a moratorium on the death penalty, and measures to combat AIDS.

1997/1998. Promoter, as European Commissioner, of the European Parliament campaign "A flower for the women of Kabul" (in collaboration with "Médécins du Monde" and with the support of European and American NGOs), against discrimination in general in Afghanistan and in particular to give Afghani women access to humanitarian aid.

2000/2002. Among the promoters of an international campaign (in collaboration with the European Commission, the European Parliament, the Inter-African Committee against traditional practices and a specially-formed network of European NGOs) for the eradication of female genital mutilation (FGM) and other "traditional practices" in the 28 African and Arab countries in which they are practised, and for the recognition by the Member States of the EU of the right to asylum of women and girls who may be victims of FGM.

Among the organisers in Cairo, where she lives, of the International Conference (June 2003) on "Legal Tools for the elimination of FGM": the conference was opened by Her Excellency Susan Mubarak, Her Excellency Grand Imam Sheikh Mohamed Sayed Tantawi, Sheikh of Al-Azhar, Bishop Moussa, the Bishop for Youth of the Coptic Orthodox Church, representative of Pope Shenouda III, Pope of Alexandria and Patriarch of the Coptic Church, and was attended by representatives of governments and NGOs from the twenty-eight most affected Afro-Arab countries.
